Survey lists DSWD No. 1 in approval rating

CABRAL

THE DEPARTMENT of Social Welfare and Development (DSWD) is the country's top ranking government agency with nearly 73 per cent approval rating for performance among government agencies.

This was one of the major findings of Pulse Asia's July Ulat ng Bayan survey, which revealed that 69 percent Filipinos ranked the DSWD number one in approval for performance.

The DSWD, the Pulse Asia survey showed, also enjoys the lowest disapproval rating among the government agencies surveyed. Only 7 percent of the respondents disapproved of the performance of the DSWD.

Of the [illegible] government entities rated for performance in the July 2007 survey, the DSWD posted the highest approval followed by the Department of Education (67 percent) and the Department of Health (63 percent).

Highest in Mindanao

The survey showed that the DSWD obtained its highest approval rating of 76 percent from rural Mindanao, followed by rural Luzon (73 percent) and urban Visayas (72 percent).

"This demonstrates that DSWD programs and services are being felt in a positive way by poor Filipinos, particularly in the countryside," Social Welfare Secretary Esperanza I. Cabral said.

The survey indicated that the July 2007 public approval for performance of the DSWD improved by 7 percent over the 62 percent in March 2007. The past year has seen a sustained and significant improvement in public approval of the DSWD. Two other frontline agencies of the government, the Department of Education and the Department of Health, traditionally enjoy high public approval and low disapproval ratings.

Cabral herself obtained a moderately high trust rating of 73 percent among Filipinos nationwide. Respondents from Metro Manila, Luzon, the economically better-off (Class ABC) and those with a fixed income, college education recorded the highest awareness ratings for the DSWD secretary (up to 80 percent). On the other hand, those most approving of her performance were the elderly, college graduates, and those from urban Visayas and rural Mindanao (up to 49 percent).

In addition, almost one half of Filipinos (45 percent) believe that the DSWD is among the top government agencies which help uplift the living conditions of the poor. The DSWD is most often ranked/mentioned first among the agencies which help uplift living standards, followed by the GSIS, DepEd and DOLE.

Mining firms are NPA targets

COMMUNIST GUERRILLAS warned yesterday that they will mount attacks against mining operations in the Philippines, accusing foreign companies of leading the "plunder" of the country's mineral resources.

Rebel forces have "standing orders to carry out all necessary action and sanctions on the people in preventing foreign big mining companies and their local big compradors and bureaucrat capitalists from carrying out the all-out plunder of our natural resources," said their spokesperson Gregorio Rosal.

He said the 7,000-member New People's Army (NPA) would carry out "revolutionary action, people's protests and other means to stop the plunder of the Philippines' environment and natural wealth."

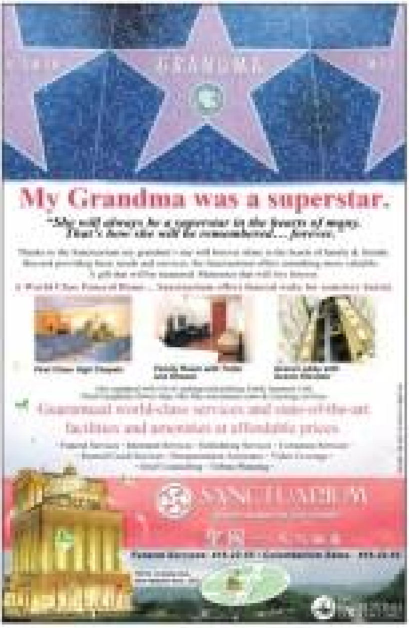

The NPA is the armed wing of the Communist Party of the Philippines, which has been waging a decades-old Maoist armed campaign.

President Macapagal-Arroyo has aggressively promoted the Philippines' underdeveloped mineral sector as a key development path out of poverty for the nearly 40 percent of Filipinos who live on $2 a day or less.

A mining law that took effect two years ago after prolonged legal challenges opened up the sector to foreign investment.

Last month the army also put the mining sector under the direct supervision of the presidential palace. AFP
